

Contributing Authors

Paul Akoury has taught first and fourth grades in public schools, has trained and mentored student teachers, and has been involved in comprehensive reform at the school, district, and statewide levels. He is currently a doctoral candidate in curriculum and instruction at the Lynch School of Education at Boston College. His focus is on authentic education. paulakoury@comcast.net

Jan Armstrong is on the faculty of the College of Education at the University of New Mexico, Albuquerque. Her scholarly interests focus on the study of professional communities as cultures, visual research methods, and contextual human development. Her recent work examines the political economy of academic writing practices and knowledge transmission in professional communities. She blogs at edprof.net. jka@unm.edu

Scott Ellison is an adjunct professor of sociology at Pellissippi State Community College. His research interests include social theory, education policy and school reform. bradleyscottellison@yahoo.com

Cheu-jei Lee is an assistant professor in the School of Education at Indiana University-Purdue University Fort Wayne. He is also the co-editor of the Scholarlypartnershipedu journal. His primary teaching responsibilities include methods courses in language arts and critical reading. His research focuses on literacy education, philosophy of educational research, and educational inquiry methodology.

leecg@ipfw.edu

Kipton D. Smilie teaches English and Education courses at St. Gregory's University in Shawnee, Oklahoma. His academic interests include history and philosophy of education, humanities education, and secondary English education.
kdsmilie@stgregorys.edu

David C. Snelgrove is adjunct professor of Educational Foundations at the University of Central Oklahoma. He is interested in the history and philosophy of education especially the life and work of John Dewey and Dewey's impact on philosophy, education, and the meaning of democratic society. He retired from the public schools in 2001. He is past-president of the Society of Philosophy and History of Education and past-editor of the Journal of Philosophy and History of Education.
Dcsnelgrov@aol.com