

Contributing Authors

Heesoon Bai is an associate professor at Simon Fraser University in Burnaby, British Columbia, Canada. She teaches in Philosophy of Education, and her research interests are in ethics, epistemology, ecology, contemplative inquiry and Asian philosophies. E-mail: heesoon_bai@sfu.ca

Tom Culham is a doctoral candidate in philosophy of education at Simon Fraser University in Burnaby, British Columbia, Canada. His research topic is ethics education of leaders, focusing on pedagogy that enhances professional-ethical judgment by complementing and balancing instrumental rationality with attention to “reasons of the heart.” His research draws on three areas: virtue ethics; contemplative practices; and pedagogy of leadership education with an emphasis on emotional intelligence. E-mail: tom.culham@gmail.com

Sheron Fraser-Burgess is assistant professor of social foundations/multicultural education at Ball State University in Muncie, Indiana. Her primary area of research is in principles and practices that advance democratic education in the social relations of school, such as teacher to student, and school to community. She teaches courses in social foundations, multicultural education, philosophy of education, and ethics of education. E-mail: sfraserburge@bsu.edu

Wayne Journell is an assistant professor and secondary social studies program coordinator at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

His research focuses on teaching politics and fostering ideological diversity within social studies classrooms. His recent work has appeared in Educational Leadership, Educational Studies, Theory and Research in Social Education, and a variety of journals related to social studies education. E-mail: wayne_journell@uncg.edu

Mark Lawrence is a graduate student of International Higher Education at Old Dominion University, Norfolk, Virginia. Previously he has been a professional musician and a teacher of ESL in Japan and San Francisco. E-mail: mlawr019@odu.edu

Christine E. Sherretz is an assistant professor of literacy at the University of Louisville, Louisville, Kentucky, where she teaches literacy methods courses at the undergraduate and graduate levels and serves as the university liaison at an urban profession development school. She earned her Ed.D. in Curriculum and Instruction from Georgia Southern University. Her research interests include teacher preparation in high poverty schools and reading and writing connections in literacy. E-mail: christine.sherretz@louisville.edu

Sunnie Lee Watson is an assistant professor in the Department of Educational Studies at Ball State University, Muncie, Indiana. She holds her dual major doctorate in educational leadership and policy studies and instructional systems technology from Indiana University. She teaches and conducts scholarly work in the field of international technology policies and leadership for digital equity, peace education, and critical systems theory for educational change and research. E-mail: slwatson@bsu.edu

William Watson is an assistant professor of learning design and technology in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction at Purdue University, West Lafayette, Indiana, and the director of the Purdue Center for Serious Games and Learning in Virtual Environments. His research interest focuses on the critical, systemic change of education to realize a learner-centered paradigm, including the application of technology such as video games, virtual environments, and learning management software in order to create customized and personalized learning environments. E-mail: brwatson@purdue.edu