

Contributing Authors

David L. Goss is a Ph.D. student in curriculum studies and teacher education in the College of Education at Texas Tech University, Lubbock, Texas.

E-mail address: david.goss@ttu.edu

Dustin Hornbeck, who holds master's degrees in American history and government and in education, taught history and government for nine years in several high schools in Ohio and was the James Madison Fellow for Ohio in 2014. He is currently a graduate assistant and doctoral student in educational leadership at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio.

E-mail address: hornbedd@miamioh.edu

Miyuki Kurihara is a teacher in an international school in Tokyo, Japan. She is a graduate of Teachers College, Columbia University, with a Masters of Arts in Early Childhood Special Education degree.

E-mail address: mk3713@tc.columbia.edu

Seung Eun McDevitt is a doctoral student and instructor at Teachers College, Columbia University, in New York City, New York. Her research interests are immigrant children, families, and teachers in early childhood/special education and teacher education. She teaches graduate coursework in early childhood/early childhood special education and supervises student teachers in that field.

E-mail address: sel2162@tc.columbia.edu

Paul Chamness Miller is a professor in the Faculty of International Liberal Arts at Akita International University in Akita, Japan. His research focuses on under-represented learners in K-12 and university settings.

E-mail address: pchamness@gmail.com

Donald Moen is a professor in the Language Institute at the Algonquin College School of Advanced Technology in Ottawa, Ontario, Canada. His research interests include intercultural communication, educational technology leadership, and values-oriented leadership.
E-mail address: moend@algonquincollege.com

Teresa Rishel is an associate professor in the Department of Elementary Education in Teachers College at Ball State University, Muncie, Indiana. Her research focuses on youth and adolescent suicide.
E-mail address: trishel@bsu.edu