

Contributing Authors

Lucy E. Bailey is an associate professor of social foundations and qualitative inquiry in the College of Education and Human Services at Oklahoma State University (OSU) and director of the OSU Gender, Women's, and Sexuality Studies Program, Stillwater, Oklahoma. E-mail: lucy.bailey@okstate.edu

Jesslyn R. Hollar is an assistant professor at Edgewood College in Madison, Wisconsin. Her research interests include teacher education, state and federal control of education quality, and teacher activism. Email: jhollar@edgewood.edu

Naglaa Mohamed is an independent scholar in Toledo, Ohio, who has an earned doctorate in special education and advocates for special education students and for social justice for minority students. E-mail: advocate4me@protonmail.com

Canute S. Thompson is a senior lecturer in the School of Education and head of the Caribbean Centre for Educational Planning, both at the The University of the West Indies, Mona, Jamaica. He is also serves as a private sector leadership coach and certified management consultant. E-mail: canute.thompson02@uwimona.edu.jm